As one of thousands of North Carolinians who use and drink water from Jordan Lake, I urge you in your official capacity to take necessary measures to reduce pollution that has compromised the quality of Jordan's water. While communities along the rivers that flow into the lake might reasonably have been permitted in the past to contribute small amounts of pollutants without seriously damaging the quality of the lake water, growth of population and volume of sewage has made this a dangerous practice. Those communities contributing sewage and surface runoff should be required, over a reasonable period of time, to reduce the pollutants that now contaminate the essential water supplies for many communities including the one where I live, Carolina Meadows, Chapel Hill. Sincerely, Robert Parker
